

Dr James Galloway
Consultant Rheumatologist
Kings College Hospital London

Dr James Galloway (MBCChB, MSc, CHP, MRCP, PhD)

Dr Galloway studied medicine in Bristol, before moving to the North West to train in Rheumatology. He trained in epidemiology at the University of Manchester, studying biologic safety using the BSR Biologics Register.

In 2012 he moved to King's College London to establish his own research group. He continues to maintain an interest in pharmacovigilance, with a focus on the infection risks of immune modulation. In addition, he is the analytics lead for the National Early Inflammatory Arthritis Audit and has also contributed to BSR guidelines (chair of the DMARD guideline working group).

Clinically he works as an honorary consultant rheumatologist at King's College Hospital, Denmark Hill. His clinical interests are inflammatory arthritis and sarcoidosis.

Dr Galloway is also an enthusiastic educator and is programme director for a post graduate research methods training course, a member of the Rheumatology SCE exams board, and lead for the undergraduate MBBS assessment programme at King's.